

About the Authors

Emerald Naylor is a 4B Honours English Literature student with a minor in History. After finishing her Undergrad, she hopes to continue her studies of the Hawaiian people and culture with a Masters from the University of Prince Edward Island.

Daniel Moholia is a University of Waterloo student currently pursuing a Bachelor of Knowledge Integration (BKI) with minors in History and Legal Studies and a specialization in Collaborative Design. His interests in historical and legal studies have often intersected in his work. He has studied religious freedom in 1918-1961 Soviet Russia, the politics of the 1942 displacement of Japanese Canadians and the foreign policy of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation in the 1930s. Currently he is working on a thesis project exploring in greater depth the provincial politics of child labour in Ontario from 1880 to 1920.

Phoenicia Kempel is a graduating joint Honours French and History student with specialisations in both War, Revolution, and Global Upheaval, and Professional French. Throughout her degree, she has taken a number of courses surrounding World War Two and the German Occupation of France. Her paper was written as a final research project for her European Seminar in her fourth year with special thought to all the resistance fighters, and in honour of her French host-mother's parents, who met as resistance fighters during WWII.

Duncan Smith is currently finishing his second year of the Honours Arts program at the University of Waterloo. He is majoring in History and intends to minor in Anthropology. His main area of interest is social history and especially food history, particularly in the colonial and industrial eras of the late modern period. His many other hobbies include reading, music, cooking, and video games.

Sarah Oeste is in the final year of her Honours Arts program at the University of Waterloo. She is majoring in History with minors in Classical Studies and International Studies. Inspired by her experiences on the Canadian Battlefield Foundation's 2016 Tour and traveling through France and England, Sarah is particularly passionate about Canadian and European history in the first half of the twentieth Century from military and social-cultural perspectives.

Christine Wilson has just completed her second year in a Joint Honours Arts degree in History and German Studies here at the University of Waterloo. Last year, Christine took part in the German department's Summer School program in Bamberg, Germany, where she got to combine her love of both disciplines every day. Going forward, Christine wants to focus on either European or Global history – but it is proving very challenging for her to decide!

Martha Brennan is a 4B Joint Honours History and Honours English Literature. In terms of areas of interest, she is in love with children's literature. In both her majors this year she has completed major research projects on the topic of Dr. Seuss, and spends much of her spare time both reading and writing children's poetry. Having just recently completed her degree, she hopes to move on to graduate studies at UW next September so she can keep studying children's literature on a full-time basis.

Ezra Beudot is a fourth-year student double majoring in Political Science and History. His primary area of study is eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. He is also active in the History Society, and serves as their treasurer.
